I'm able to save the track title and artist within the database when creating the track, but if I try to update it via the 'Update' button on the website, it doesn't recognize the previous tracks and basically just creates a new track if it hasn't already been added for that day. Is it possible for me to modify my database schema to save for, let's say, 10 days instead of only 1 day? I've tried using a modified version of this example: INSERT INTO media ( id, track_title, artist_id, genre_id, track_title_date, artist_name, genre_name, playing_date, added_date, picture, photo, general, rating, artist_name, genre_name, status_id, day) VALUES('20', 'Track1', '1', 'GENRE_NAME', 'DAYS', 'DAY', '0', '0', 'NULL', '0', '0', '0', '0', '0', '0', 'NULL', '1', '1') ON DUPLICATE KEY UPDATE track_title = VALUES(track_title), artist_name = VALUES(artist_name) I also tried this modified version of this: CREATE TABLE `media` ( id SERIAL PRIMARY KEY, artist_name VARCHAR(255) NOT NULL, genre_name VARCHAR(255) e79caf774b

I am trying to build a node.js server that polls a web socket and updates the current time. I have this working with only a getJSON function. If I add the setInterval function it does not update my current time. How can I use both together? The code below works. Note that it is only a getJSON call as I am using mongodb to store and retrieve the time. var MongoClient = require('mongodb').MongoClient; MongoClient.connect('mongodb://localhost:27020', function(err, db) { if (err) throw err; db.collection('iplinfo', function(err, collection) { collection.find({}, {name: 1, '$regex': {'ime': /([0-9]+)'}).toArray(function (err, results) { console.log(results); if (results.length) { setInterval(function() { db.collection('iplinfo', function(err, collection) { collection.find({time: /([0-9]+)'}).toArray(function (err, results) { console.log(results); if (results.length) {
