Diffuse triploidy with male mosaicism. Diffuse triploidy with partial blastocyst development was observed in all embryos carried by a couple without prior treatment by intracytoplasmic sperm injection (ICSI). Fluorescence in situ hybridization (FISH) with probes for chromosomes X and Y did not show any signal on the biopsied blastocysts, while the same probes were found in the nonbiopsied blastocysts, indicating that a trisomy X was present in all blastocysts, and the paternal origin of this trisomy X was confirmed by either the FISH analysis or maternal origin of the signal on the biopsied blastocyst. By the FISH analysis using probes for chromosomes

18 and 19, a trisomy 18 mosaicism was identified in the blastocyst biopsied with maternal origin. A further biopsy by the same method for chromosome 18 revealed a monosomy 18 in all blastocysts, which indicated that the trisomy 18 was present as a diffuse triploidy due to a chromosome nondisjunction event in a mature egg, with some blastomeres showing trisomy 18 and others showing monosomy 18. These
