Transition metal complexes with bidentate ligands: Their use as potential catalysts and activators for chemical and biochemical processes. A tetradentate ligand, (E)-1,2-bis(4-(pyridin-3-yl)phenyl)ethane-1,2-dione, has been designed and synthesised that can form 2:1 complexes with Pd(II) and Fe(III). In the latter case, a double cleavage of the metal-chelating entity upon coordination of a nitrate (hydro-displacement) is observed. In the presence of oxygen, L binds Pd(II) to form a trans-bis(pyridine), trans-bis(2,2'-bipyridine) dication of Pd(II). The dication thus obtained reacts rapidly with CO(2) to give the Pd(L)(CO(2))(2) complex in which the [Pd(L)(CO(2))(2)] fragment is bound to the central pyridine of the bidentate ligand, with an [Pd(L)(CO(2))] fragment on the outer pyridines. The metal centre is 12-fold bonded to the two pyridyl groups in a trans fashion. The {Pd(L)}(2+) fragment, a metal-metal bonded fragment, can also react with CO(2) to form a Pd(2)(CO(2))(L) complex. The complex is also a catalytic system for the reaction of CO(2) with ethylene, as well as a reduction catalyst for ket

There's no example to quickly get you started, but you don't really need to spend a lot of time to figure out how things work. A couple of items need to be filled in to obtain accurate results. On the one hand, a solid set of criteria must be added to your workspace. The number of criteria you add is entirely up to you, depending on the weight of the decision. Set criteria, options, and analyze rankings Criteria comes in two forms, namely value or score, as well as a yes or no decision. The first type also lets you set the operation type, with either more or less representing the value closer to the favorable output. With this option selected, you have the possibility to provide the acceptable value. Once criteria is configured, you can move on to the options tab. Here, you get to add the options of your decision, with criteria associated to each option. Values need to be filled in for each criteria, based on the type. The rankings tab is the last place to visit. Here you get an organized table which contains positive or negative scores of all options based on criteria values. A few last words Taking everything into consideration, we can state that Decision Oven might not feel like it can be of much help at a first glance, but it's sure to at least point you in the right direction.
