If elected, the Howard-era government plans to spend an extra $10 billion a year on defence. Even if the coalition commits to halving the defence budget, it will not be enough. At best, the current coalition will be able to sustain its expenditure on the military at 2011 levels (a limit it probably cannot meet). At worst, it will preside over a doubling to about $130 billion a year. So we're looking at a budget which, with grants-in-aid, will rise to over $180 billion, a 75 percent increase, not to mention the additional $18 billion it will take to fund the Coalition's plans to expand the defence budget by $10 billion a year. In short, it looks like a total increase of $78 billion over a decade. Given that current commitments are around $160 billion (and that the Coalition plans to spend more), an extra $78 billion has to be raised by new taxes, cuts, or by tightening spending elsewhere in the budget. The Coalition's plan is to raise $14 billion from new taxes. To that we might add an additional $28 billion (again on top of existing commitments), from cuts
